1. Traffic on the inland waterways, which had temporarily increased heavily to relieve the railroads in East Germany, returned to normal two or three weeks ago. The heavy use of the waterways was an aftermath of the mass demonstration of 17 June 1953. The transport of goods to the USSR, temporarily sent by waterways, is now going by rail via Poland. The increased guard at the canal locks remains at the same strength.
2. Koenigs wusterhausen, heretofore used as a center for the exchange of coal, will now be used entirely for the exchange of grain. Since there is a lack of goods for exchange purposes, only half of the capacity will be used in the future.
